Notes

1. Although appearing as fol. 15 in the current binding, this badly faded and torn folio marks the start of the text. A few identifiable words confirm this: [...]est [le] tretiz que m[...] fist a ma dame [...]. [TGH]

2. Only the second half of lines from the top half of the folio are visible due to damage. The text proper evidently starts ten lines down the page, but only the odd word is legible. [TGH]

3. The few surviving words on this page enable the reader to identify the first four lines of the text, starting with Femme ke aproche soun tens (quoted from MS C). In this instance, we have used a different numbering system based on letters, to avoid arbitrary counting of such fragmentary single-word scraps within the surviving substantive body of the text. [TGH]

4. This folio is almost entirely missing, save for a marginal stub. Four lines around halfway down begin Pur l'o[...], Ton [...], Et q[...] and Et, suggesting a close correspondence with lines 25-28 in MS C. There appear to be a number of blank lines between the final line of Infancy and Early Childhood and the start of the Parts of the Body section below it (visible is Faites, the opening word of line 31 in MS C. [ETFM #TGH]

5. This folio is almost entirely missing, save for a marginal stub. [ETFM]

6. This section is acephalous. [ETFM]

7. Unusually, this MS has un furché rather than os furché, with the second word only being the subject of glossing. It is therefore inadequate to use AND os_1 as a headword, with the compound os furché. The MED has hokbone listed under the headword hok. [ETFM]

8. The gloss is located above found. [ETFM]

9. This line has been inserted in the margin with a cross. [ETFM]

10. The two glosses on this line are executed in the incorrect order, but are regularised by the scribe through 'a' and 'b'. [ETFM]

11. The gloss is executed over foreins. [ETFM]

12. Only the first letter of certain lines is visible, the rest of the folio having been cut or torn out. [ETFM]

13. Only the final letters of an addition or gloss are visible, the rest of the folio having been cut or torn out. [ETFM]

14. The entire folio has been cut or torn out. [ETFM]

15. The entire folio has been cut or torn out. [ETFM]

16. The 'u' and 'c' have been joined by a straight line, over an erased 'n' (possibly corrected 'chauncez'). [ETFM]

17. Scribal correction from 'la'. [ETFM]

18. The gloss thegh here appears to offer sheath as an additional sense to those recorded in MED, though related in sense – all concern different kinds of covering or enclosure (e.g. the membrane covering the brain; a box, chest; a cover for a chest; an enclosed piece of land). [TGH]

19. Lines 76a and 76b are inserted in the margin, and indicated in the text with a nota. They record an alternative discussion of the word cotel, as found in MSS BO, and we have therefore numbered them separately from the rest of the text. [ETFM #TGH]

20. Lines 76a and 76b are inserted in the margin, and indicated in the text with a nota. See note to 76a. [ETFM]

21. See AND pane_1: fur, skin used for lining (a hood or cloak etc.). [TGH]

22. The Middle English gloss, strein, is defined by the MED (under stren as 'the germinal vesicle in the yolk of an egg', corresponding (approximately) to AND estraine, 'first fruits'. [ETFM]

23. This line has been added in the margin, with its position relative to the main text indicated through a marginal 'nota'. [ETFM]

24. A spelling of reposer hitherto unrecorded in AND2. [ETFM]

25. The two words are separated by two strokes. [ETFM]

26. The scribe appears to have either mis-copied l'otreit for le treit. [ETFM]

27. The presence of only three minims makes it impossible to read this term as busshoun. [ETFM]

28. The scribe has added this note in the margin. [ETFM]

29. Substantive frillom is not attested in AND, but is presumably cognate with the adjective frillus (cold, chilly) and closely similar to modern French frissons. []

30. Possibly a corruption of desray, via the intermediary dirray. [ETFM]

31. The two words are separated by a slash. [ETFM]

32. This line has been executed in the margin, and incorporated into the text through a nota. [ETFM]

33. The MED entry for don (adj.) includes a note about the don kute, a kind of bird, perhaps the common, or bald, coot (Fulica atra). [TGH]

34. This line has been executed in the margin, and incorporated into the text through a nota. [ETFM]

35. This line has been executed in the margin, and incorporated into the text through a nota. [ETFM]

36. This line has been executed in the margin, and incorporated into the text through a nota. [ETFM]

37. This predates existing MED mouting by a century. [ETFM]

38. The gloss appears to misinterpret affair, topic, as a faire, to do. [ETFM]

39. The gloss appears to have mistaken dame (lady) for dame (doe). [TGH]

40. A hitherto-unattested form. [ETFM]

41. The bottom section of this folio is missing, likely containing lines equivalent to C 341-42. [TGH]

42. The bottom section of this folio is missing, likely containing lines equivalent to C 341-42. [TGH]

43. The use of espeluper as a substantive is not recorded in AND2. [ETFM]

44. The two words are separated in the MS by slashes. [ETFM]

45. This line has been executed in the margin, and incorporated into the text through a nota. [ETFM]

46. The lower part of this folio is missing, although with no apparent loss of text. [ETFM]

47. The gloss aray may be admissible with a generic or unspecific sense of conduct, behavior, though its antonym derai (disorder, disturbance; noise, outcry) would better fit the specific sense of the French term. [TGH]

48. Present in DEAF, not AND2. [ETFM]

49. cote is not attested with this sense, nor as a variant of cultiver, in AND or DEAF. [TGH]

50. These two lines in most MSS are executed as a single line, with an arrow / slash added to separate them. [ETFM]

51. AND2 records restuel, here 'rest (for a lance'), under the same lemma as rastel, seen above as 'rake'. [ETFM]

52. See AND chance, sense 3: danger, hazard. [TGH]

53. Approximately half of this folio has been torn, obscuring the latter part of most lines. Where possible, the end of the word 'in-progress' has been provided in the interpretive edition, but no attempt has been made to reconstruct the remainder of the missing lines. [ETFM]

54. Approximately half of this folio has been torn, obscuring the former part of most lines. Where possible, the start of the word 'in-progress' has been provided in the interpretive edition, but no attempt has been made to reconstruct the remainder of the missing lines. [ETFM]

55. The French word to which this English gloss corresponds has been lost to damage. Assuming that the line here follows the readings of other manuscripts (from MS C, line 459: Ne serra pas trop nounchaliere), it is plausible that the full English word is taryenere, a nominalisation of the verb tarien: to delay in acting, tarry, procrastinate. The noun tarienere, with the sense of one who tarries, would be a new attestation for the MED. [TGH]

56. Based on the readings in other manuscripts (e.g. BCY), this word is probably rastuer [TGH]

57. This line has been executed in the margin, and incorporated into the text through a nota. [ETFM]

58. The first letter of this line has been erased. [ETFM]

59. The third minim on the 'm' has been added above. [ETFM]

60. Is this French geste, with the sense of race, family, lineage, or could it be a code-switched gest, an invited guest? [TGH]

61. This line has been executed in the margin. [ETFM]

62. This line has been added in the margin, and inserted using a nota. [ETFM]

63. This and the following line have been added in the margin, and inserted using a nota. As at 76a and 76b above, they appear to offer an alternative version of the text, and specifically of the mention of brewing as an art. The placement, however, is confusing: in the version of this passage found in CGT, they come before the lines discussing drunkenness found below here, at 459 onward. This section in MS B is closely similar (it is the only other extant MS to include the wordplay on buler), but includes neither these two interpolated lines nor the passage on drunkenness. [TGH]

64. The two words are separated by a slash. [ETFM]

65. On the face of it, the double negative (les lytyll) in the gloss appears to contradict the sense of the French. There are signs that lytyll has been written in over an erasure. [TGH]

66. The two words have been separated by a slash. [ETFM]

67. This line has been executed into the margin, and incorporated into the main text through a marginal nota. [ETFM]

68. Two slashes connect the first 'e' to the 'p'. []

69. This folio contains an anathema, written in a later secretary hand over two lines perpendicular to the main text: Quisquis emit librum furto a quocumque receptum furtum committit est furti reus ergo. [ETFM]

70. The two letters have been separated by slashes. [ETFM]

71. The two letters have been separated by slashes. [ETFM]

72. One of the minims has been inserted later. [ETFM]

73. The two words have been separated by a slash. [ETFM]

74. The two words have been separated by slashes. [ETFM]

75. The three words have been separated using slashes. [ETFM]

76. This folio has been almost entirely lost. [ETFM]

77. This folio has been almost entirely lost. [ETFM]

78. This folio has been almost entirely lost. [ETFM]

79. This folio has been almost entirely lost. [ETFM]

80. Over half of this folio has been torn, obscuring the latter part of most lines. Where possible, the end of the word 'in-progress' has been provided in the interpretive edition, but no attempt has been made to reconstruct the remainder of the missing lines. [ETFM]

81. This section is acephalous. [ETFM]

82. We have supplied a speculative resolution of the English gloss as waibrede, based on the equivalent glosses in MSS ABCOTY. [TGH]

83. The form ermois is visible up to four times on what remains of the lower half of this page (lines 556, 558, 560, and potentially 562). It is likely that this copy recorded a passage of homonym play not found in the other extant copies, perhaps contrasting ermoise and ernois. []

84. This folio has been almost entirely lost. [ETFM]

85. This term has been somewhat awkwardly corrected. [ETFM]

86. The final French word of the line has had a word-final 'r' erased. [ETFM]

87. The glosses, unusually for this MS, are executed sequentially at the end of the line. [ETFM]

88. The target for this gloss is indicated with two small slashes above huse. [ETFM]

89. The gloss waggys is not attested in MED as a tree name. However, waggys is found further up in MS 4, also in close proximity to coudre, as the verb gloss to croust. Has the scribe or exemplar been misled here by the repeat mention of coudre? [TGH]

90. Where headings such as this do not integrate into the versification, they have been treated as rubrics. [ETFM]

91. gale is not attested in the AND, with gal_2, 'pleasure', the closest corresponding entry. It is possible (perhaps likely) that the scribe is attempting to regularise the unusual use (in most other MSS) of Middle English night[i]gale as part of the rhyme-scheme, and has attempted to reconstruct a plausible French ending to the sentence. [ETFM]

92. These two glosses appear to have been added separately, but form a coherent single gloss. [ETFM]

93. For the gloss, see the compound mire-dromble under sense 4 of mire: the European bittern. [TGH]

94. Most of this folio has been torn, obscuring the latter part of most lines. Where possible, the end of the word 'in-progress' has been provided in the interpretive edition, but no attempt has been made to reconstruct the remainder of the missing lines. [ETFM]

95. As with the other side of the folio, most of the lines have been at least partially lost. [ETFM]

96. These lines have been added in the margin. [ETFM]

97. Several lines have been entirely lost. [ETFM]

98. The visible letters from the gloss, alongside evidence from other manuscripts, suggest that the word may have been ruddok, glossing verder. [TGH]

99. Several lines have been entirely lost. [ETFM]

100. The visible letter from the main text hand, alongside evidence from other manuscripts, suggests that the word may have been forester. [TGH]

101. These lines have been added in the margin. [ETFM]

102. Rothwell corrects this word in both MSS G and T to 'trestel', but concedes that no equivalent use of that word (to mean a stack of hay) is attested in Godefroy or Tobler-Lommatsch. Definition 4 under trestel in AND contains only variants of this line from the Tretiz and from the closely-derived Nominale sive Verbale, none of which supply the internal 't' that Rothwell adds here (the forms attested are tresel from MS G, tresselle from the Nominale, and trenceaus from O). AND also has a hypothetical headword [tasel] for what appears to be the same word used in MS T (line 272 of our edition). In both instances, a far more likely fit is provided by AND trusse (definition 2: truss of hay, etc.), with diminutive form trussel or tresel. [TGH]

103. Several lines have been entirely lost. [ETFM]

104. The final minim has been added above the line. [ETFM]

105. A tear in the parchment and loss of the left-hand side of the folio has caused loss of some text from the final lines of this page. [ETFM]

106. The scribe has likely added the partitive article du, and interpreted l'oriele as a single noun, loriele [ETFM]

107. The scribe appears not to have understood his exemplar. [ETFM]

108. This gloss is executed at the end of the line, and marked with a pair of slashes to the term. [ETFM]

109. There is a line of upside-down erased text here, as well as several pen-trials further down on the folio. [ETFM]

110. The gloss here is difficult. We suggest reading cod-ams, a compound that would be formed of cod (cf. MS O line 945, coddes) and (h)am, designating a wooden frame that embraces the horse; but this is only a tentative interpretation. [TGH]

111. If ferde does, as we suggest, mean fear, the glossing here suggests that the scribe did not fully understand this expression. [TGH]

112. Another potential incorrect gloss. If related to haven, the scribe may have understood the French as l'aviez, from the verb to have; if linked instead to heven (to lift), perhaps the scribe misunderstood the French word as part of the verb lever? [TGH]

113. This folio has been almost entirely lost. [ETFM]

114. This folio has been almost entirely lost. [ETFM]

115. This folio has been almost entirely lost. [ETFM]

116. This folio has been almost entirely lost. [ETFM]

117. This folio has been almost entirely lost, but the fragments visible correspond to ll. C 1018-25 (on building) followed by a rubric. [ETFM]

118. This folio has been almost entirely lost. [ETFM]

119. This folio has been almost entirely lost. [ETFM]

120. This folio has been almost entirely lost. [ETFM]

121. This folio has been almost entirely lost. Based on a reconstruction of line numbering (see Appendix), it is probable that a further folio (31 in the numbering of this edition) has been lost. [ETFM]

122. This folio has been almost entirely lost. Based on a reconstruction of line numbering (see Appendix), it is probable that a further folio (31 in the numbering of this edition) has been lost. [TGH]
